

June - Activities for Children

June: In Aldgate High Street, Whitechapel High Street, just before you get to the bottom of Osborn Street, which leads into Brick Lane, there was a library plus the Whitechapel Art Gallery.

And for children, specifically, it was on a Saturday morning, you could go above there, and there was all activities for children. So could do pottery making, you could do painting, you could do lino cuts and things like that. And of course, it was all free.

Interviewer: Whereabouts was that?

June: It was right above the Whitechapel Art Gallery, which I think was attached to the library. I'm guessing the library is still there? And yeah, and that used to be great fun to do that.

But I do remember in the in the in the Art Gallery, I'm sure they had some mummies, because I used to be terrified of them.

Interviewer: Understandably

June: Yes, yes, I can remember these big, the cases they came in, sarcophagus, yeah, yeah. I can remember being terrified of them, and it had to be there because we wouldn't have gone into West End of places like that to galleries, but yeah, so we had all that.
